Summary of the main achievements of the charity during the year

One of the charity's objects is to promote the efficiency of the police, the administration of the law and good citizenship and greater public participation in the prevention and solution of crime, in particular in relation to counterfeiting and consumer protection. To start achieving some of this, the charity is working on a novel concept to:

1. Dissuade the general public from purchasing counterfeit/fake products and items.
2. Educate the general public on the dangers of acquiring counterfeit/fake products and items.
3. Inform the general public on how they may protect themselves from becoming victims of fraud.

The charity has named its concept "The Fake Shop". What is The Fake Shop? With so many High Street shops closing down there isn't a shortage of potential sites to run The Fake Shop Project.

In essence, the charity proposes to put back into use empty stores in towns and cities, with the participation of local trading standards, police, local authorities and other stake holders, and to furnish them with basic shop fittings.

On display the customer will find a vast assortment of items, but not ordinary items. Counterfeit products will be on show as if they were for sale but instead of a price tag they will carry warnings. The warnings will help consumers discover truths about counterfeit products and consumer scams.

In and around the shops the consumer will also be able to read story boards, for example, telling of how criminals' profit and reinvest proceeds of sales in further criminal activities, or about a seven year old child who was sadly killed by a fake phone charger. Informative leaflets will be handed out to all members of the public.

They can be product specific if in the Borough Council area there is a particular problem with fake cosmetic products, for example. Trained volunteers will be on hand to discuss relative issues with the public and give advice where appropriate. The charity has trialled its first Fake Shop with resounding success. The public was most enthusiastic and showed genuine interest as did the local authority and police.

ITV and BBC both featured the initiative on their respective news channels, as did radio stations and the press. Achievements and performance

Summary of the main achievements of the charity during the year

One of the charity's objects is to promote the efficiency of the police, the administration of the law and good citizenship and greater public participation in the prevention and solution of crime, in particular in relation to counterfeiting and consumer protection. To start achieving some of this, the charity is working on a novel concept to:

1. Dissuade the general public from purchasing counterfeit/fake products and items.
2. Educate the general public on the dangers of acquiring counterfeit/fake products and items.
3. Inform the general public on how they may protect themselves from becoming victims of fraud

The charity has named its concept "The Fake Shop".

What is The Fake Shop?

With so many High Street shops closing down there isn't a shortage of potential sites to run The Fake Shop Project. In essence, the charity proposes to put back into use empty stores in towns and cities, with the participation of local trading standards, police, local authorities and other stake holders, and to furnish them with basic shop fittings.

On display the customer will find a vast assortment of items, but not ordinary items. Counterfeit products will be on show as if they were for sale but instead of a price tag they will carry warnings.

The warnings will help consumers discover truths about counterfeit products and consumer scams.

In and around the shops the consumer will also be able to read story boards, for example, telling of how criminals profit and reinvest proceeds of sales in further criminal activities, or about a seven year old child who was sadly killed by a fake phone charger. Informative leaflets will be handed out to all members of the public.

They can be product specific if in the Borough Council area there is a particular problem with fake cosmetic products, for example. Trained volunteers will be on hand to discuss relative issues with the public and give advice where appropriate.

The charity has trialled its first Fake Shop with resounding success. The public was most enthusiastic and showed genuine interest as did the local authority and police.

ITV and BBC both featured the initiative on their respective news channels, as did radio stations and the press.
