The Norman Cohn Charitable Trust

Trustees' report for period ending 31st March 2025

Objectives and Activities

The Norman Cohn Charitable Trust was registered as a charity with the Charity Commission on 2nd November 2017.

Its objective is to advance education into the causes of extremism, and what can be done to counter it.

It does this in particular, but not exclusively, by holding public lectures and by making their content widely available via the internet and other means.

In setting its objectives and planning its activities, trustees have regard to the Charity Commission's guidance on public benefit.

Achievements and Performance

The charity was given its public launch in March 2019 in an event at the British Academy in London. (Norman Cohn, after who the charity is named, was a Fellow of the British Academy.) At the event the eminent political philosopher John Gray gave a lecture entitled 'Politics, Religion and Psychopathology: how the work of Norman Cohn helps us understand the present'.

A website has been established through which the charity can publicise its activities. In particular the website seeks to broaden public knowledge of the work of Professor Norman Cohn, whose world-renowned publications looked at the historical origins of modern-day extremism or, in his words, those who sought "to purify the world, through the annihilation of some category of human beings imagined as agents of corruption and incarnations of evil".

In May 2022 the charity organised a lecture at the British Academy in conjunction with and support from the Centre for the Critical Study of Apocalyptic and Millenarian Movements (CenSAMM). The lecture, entitled 'Dark Money and the Subversion of Global Politics', was given by Peter Geoghegan, Editor-in-Chief of the award-winning news website openDemocracy. In addition to those attending the lecture in person, it was streamed on the internet and a recording has been made available on the charity's website.

The trustees now feel that the such large-scale public lectures are not the most effective use of the charity's limited resources. They are exploring the possibility of promoting the charity's aims by holding more frequent but smaller scale meetings and seminars.

Through its website the Charity continues to monitor and promote new writing and research on themes pioneered by Norman Cohn, and encourage related debate.

Geoghegan led the site's investigation into dark money in British politics that was nominated for a 2019 British Journalism Award and the Paul Foot Award. In his talk, Geoghegan discussed what is known of the world of the oligarchs in the current context, and considered the implications of an ecosphere in which an organisation like Twitter (X) can be individually owned and controlled.

In addition to those attending the lecture, it was streamed on the internet and a recording has been made available on the charity's website.
