Trustees Report

For the year ended 30 April 202

This report has been prepared in accordance with the Statement of Recommended Practice (SORP) "Accounting and Reporting by Charities" issued in February 2005 and the Charities Act 2011.

Arian Teleheal is a UK registered charity which enables doctors working in warzones and low resource countries to consult with expert clinicians from across the world by using everyday technology such as smart phones, instant messaging, and video chat. We provide advice in all major specialties, and, in addition to continuing all our emergency care, we have responded to the COVID-19 pandemic by providing advice on management of patients, and have also expanded our work to provide mental health support.

We have around 100 volunteer doctors, in a wide range of specialties, based in countries including the UK, the USA, Canada, Australia and Western Europe. They support local doctors in countries including Afghanistan (where we began our work began). We initially focused on all aspects of emergency care, including major trauma, and then expanded our approach to cover assisting local doctors with COVID-19 patients and now we are also providing advice on mental health especially to local clinicians and those clinicians who are managing traumatic cases.

Our work has also focused on advocating for the rights of migrants and refugees through media platforms and social media.

How Do We Work?

Local doctors who want advice from specialists contact our case management team 24/7 by instant messaging or video chat. Their patient's case is then allocated to an appropriate specialist, who will review it and then discuss it or reply by instant messaging or video chat. The local doctor then considers the advice to help them treat their patient. Unlike many other telemedicine projects, Arian Teleheal provides advice for emergency cases in a four-hour window, helping save hundreds of lives each year in warzones and low resource countries. We advise in both emergency situations, and on complex cases of any kind, where specialist advice could help a local doctor. Our doctors use everyday technology such as their smartphones rather than expensive telemedicine equipment because of the areas in which the local doctors are based, and to maximise the availability of our volunteer doctors.

We also support the mental wellbeing of local clinicians and those clinicians who are exposed to traumatic experiences, such as managing refugee patients, through our virtual seminars led by our specialists.

What Impact Have We Made?

The volunteer doctors of Arian Teleheal have already saved the lives of many war-stricken men, women, and children, and continue to do so on a daily basis. A pilot of our work across five hospitals with Emergency Departments and Intensive Care Units in Kabul, Afghanistan, was surveyed in 2015-

2016, and concluded that “dozens of lives were saved” and that local medics found our work “hugely supportive and educational”. The success of this pilot saw our service rolled out to all major Emergency and Intensive Care Departments in Afghanistan between 2016-2019, serving a country of 35 million people. Arian Teleheal began supporting the Independent Doctors’ Association (IDA) in Syria in 2017, providing help to Syrian medics who care for 1.3 million people in Aleppo.

Since the beginning of pandemic, we have responded to COVID-19 by expanding our advice to include up-to-date management advice for patients, as well as providing mental health advice as detailed below:

Covid-19 support:

Arian Teleheal charity has provided humanitarian Covid-19 support from the beginning of pandemic. Arian Teleheal volunteer teams consist of fully qualified and experienced specialists from intensive and critical care, acute medicine, emergency medicine, radiology and other specialties. These specialists work in the UK and across the world on the frontline of Covid-19. They have experience of managing Covid-19 patients, including their ventilation. Our specialists have contributed to supporting medics in low resource countries on voluntary basis through the following 4 support systems:

1. Providing WHO and other scientific guidelines on continuous basis
2. Providing specialist advice on 24/7 basis for any questions from doctors, including, case management of severe cases in emergency and intensive care units
3. Providing regular training for all Covid-19 related topics
4. Providing mental health support to frontline workers

Our work has also focused on advocating for the rights of migrants and refugees through our founder, Dr Arian’s, interviews on media platforms, podcasts and social media.

Research presentation and publication

Our work has been published by UK Radiological Congress (UKRC), The Royal College of Radiologists Annual Scientific Meeting (RCR-ASM), the British Medical Journal (BMJ), The Lancet and media platforms. It has also been presented at numerous national and international conferences, mainly as keynote speeches by our founder, Dr Arian.

Telemedicine Pioneers

Arian Teleheal has achieved several world firsts in telemedicine: 2015, Arian Teleheal became the first organisation in the world to offer live 24/7 international clinical telemedicine support using secure social media channels on smartphones, with advice based on WHO guidelines. In 2017, Arian Teleheal performed the world’s first international telemedicine consultation using augmented reality on Microsoft HoloLens. In 2020, Arian Teleheal started supporting international medical colleagues with specialist Covid-19 advice using simple technology and provided regular expert-led virtual educational webinars on all COVID-19 topics.

Collaboration

We collaborate with a range of carefully chosen partners in multi-agency projects, using our expertise and learning to help improve healthcare across the world, especially through innovative use of readily available technology. This includes acting as an advisory consultancy to governments and international organisations in digital health, providing advice on how to establish, launch and scale-up systems, especially as applied to emergency care, migration health,

- Select suitable accounting policies and then apply them consistently;
