Activities

Activities: 'It does none of these'

Purposes: 'the advancement of the arts, heritage, culture or science'

What the charity does: CFHS provides information and advice to those who are seeking information about their family roots, normally those with a Caithness connection. It collects research and data in order to further the knowledge available and publishes, in print or on-line, the results of that research. Meetings are held within the County or virtually through an Internet provider to allow members and the general public hear about a specialist topic. Members of the society benefit by receiving a Journal, published or in electronic format, with two or three issues a year. Members are invited to contribute to it thus enhancing their own research skills and building connections to other members. The Society contribute to the educational knowledge of Scottish Family History by being an affiliated member of the Scottish Family History Societies.

Beneficiaries: 'Other defined groups'

Objectives: The objects of the Society will be to advance education through promoting and encouraging the public study of Family History, Genealogy and Local History in Caithness by meetings, lectures and publications.
