What the charity does: Làmhán is a Scottish charity dedicated to preserving and teaching traditional textile and dressmaking skills while promoting inclusion, sustainability, and cultural heritage. It provides accessible, high-quality sewing and textile education to individuals of all backgrounds, especially those facing social or economic barriers. Through hands-on workshops, training, apprenticeships, and outreach, we empower people to learn skills such as sewing, tailoring, weaving, and kilt-making. These are taught not only as creative practices but also as tools for well-being, confidence, and employability. Committed to environmental responsibility, the charity integrates reuse, repair, and sustainable materials into all aspects of its work. By engaging communities and young people alike, we ensure that Scotland's textile traditions are preserved and passed on, while making a positive social and environmental impact.
